The Gender and Health Education Initiative was established in 2004 to promote educational initiatives within the Faculty of Health Sciences which explore the relationships of gender and health.

- Providing opportunities for innovation in teaching and learning
- Encouraging interdisciplinary educational collaborations

Applications are invited from faculty, staff and students in the Faculty of Health Sciences for proposals to develop and/or implement educational initiatives. Staff and student proposals require a faculty supervisor.

Collaborative projects involving faculty and students and interdisciplinary projects crossing program and discipline boundaries are encouraged.

Examples of appropriate projects include, but are not limited to:

- Development of interactive educational computer modules
- Planning and staging a workshop, conference, or seminar addressing aspects of gender and health
- Determining better/best ways to deliver content around gender and health
- Evaluating the effectiveness of educative endeavours in gender and health.

Successful applicants will be asked to either provide a poster display or deliver a presentation at a future May Cohen Lecture, hosted by the McMaster University Gender & Health Education Initiative.
